Motivated To Love: How To Love Your Spouse Unconditionally Through The Worst Seasons Of Your Marriage By Amanda Taylor

I don't love you anymore. Those were the words of my husband one dreadful Sunday morning. When you're not expecting to hear that...those five words have a way of taking the life right out of your day. Trying to compose yourself as he shares that he has had an emotional affair is no easier. You become accustom to the anger...the pain becomes your closest friend. The deep despair that I felt during this season would often overtake my entire day. Part of me wanted to cave in...concede to the unbearable weight. The other part wanted to fight...to stand for my marriage regardless of how unclear the outcome would be. In spite of the anger, the depression and the rejection...I chose to stand. I chose to seek God for strength and wisdom so that I could be strong enough to love my husband past my pain. I chose to stand by him as God healed his soul.

I understand that this may be foreign for some...judging from our critics, some would even call me crazy. To be honest, I agree. You have to be crazy to believe that love can conquer all. Honestly, most marriages need more of that "crazy" type of love. There is an assault on the institution of marriage and a lack of authentic resources that tackle the realities of marriage. I am living proof that a broken marriage can be restored. I used certain strategies that not only helped me but helped my husband heal. Maybe you need these strategies...maybe you know someone else who does. No matter the case, this book is my gift to your marriage.

Motivated To Love is a step-by-step guide to discovering how to love your spouse unconditionally even when your marriage is in its worst season. With the purchase of this book, you will also receive access to my private Facebook group made up of over 1200 spouses who are all standing together to see their marriages restored.
