Skimmers: Book 5 (The Face of the Enemy Series) By GLYN ADAMS

The Skimmers.

Revised on April, 2016.

They had made no noise. Maybe it was the light of the lantern... whatever it was the prisoners were awake; still in their uniforms. Matthew recognised his dining companions of just a short week or so ago.

"Admiral Sir, Captain: Do not be startled, we are British sailors come to free you, I am a Commander in the King's Navy sir."

"The devil you say," said the familiar voice of Admiral Rockwell, "You look more like a couple of wraiths in that 'get-up'."

The Admiral moved closer and looked at his rescuers, suddenly giving a deep throaty chuckle.

"Right son, tell me what the set-up is?"

"You recognise me sir, dressed as I am?"

"Mr Morgan, I would recognise you if you wore pigtails and gingham dress.

Dammit man we sat opposite each other across a dinner table not many nights ago, have you forgotten? And if I had any doubts, that big ox stood behind you would have dispelled them. You might be impossible to recognise: but him... never!"

Matthew turned around and looked at Finn, a monstrous black figure, his shoulders bent over under the low deck head, arms swinging forward, carrying a knife in one hand, the bloodied-edge gleaming in the poor light. He could see where there might be a problem disguising his identity.
